Academic Contribution through Courses

Career Point University promotes social awareness and inclusivity through its academic curriculum, particularly in the field of Sociology. Courses such as Principles of Sociology, Sociology of Social Movements, and Sociology play a vital role in understanding and addressing various forms of social inequality.

The Principles of Sociology course introduces students to the basic concepts of society, culture, and social structure, enabling them to recognize issues of inequality and discrimination within different social systems.

The Sociology of Social Movements course helps students explore how collective efforts and social movements contribute to reducing inequalities and bringing about social justice and policy change. It inspires learners to understand the power of social action in promoting equality and inclusiveness.

The general Sociology course provides a comprehensive understanding of how social institutions, communities, and policies affect marginalized groups. It encourages critical thinking about social issues such as caste, class, gender, and economic disparities.

Through these courses, the University nurtures socially responsible citizens who are aware of their role in building a fair and equal society, aligning with the objectives of SDG 10 – Reduced Inequalities.
